MINUTES OF THE HURON RIVER
LABRADOR RETRIEVER CLUB
GENERAL MEMBERSHIP MEETING
MAY 3, 2002

A regular meeting of the HRLRC was held at Hartland High School.

Members present were: Beverly & George Schnell, Mike Rathsburg, Dolores Richards, Stella Blair, Mike Pipia, Angela Ewald, Annie Cogo, Mike Merians, Pauline Mortier, Gary Cooper, Cheryl Wellnitz, Nancy Chargo, Cindy Skiba, Mary MacLean, Marsha Standler, Jeanine Asch, and Judy Trevino.

Guests present were: Dave Hinkel, Leesa Kotrip, Pam Nichols, Patty Wayne and Mark Foster.

The meeting was called to order by President Beverly Schnell at 7:54 p.m.

OFFICER REPORTS

Treasurer: Cheryl read the treasurer's report. A motion to accept the report as read was passed.

Secretary: Jeanine read the minutes from the April meeting. Mike Rathsburg motioned to accept the minutes as read. Motion passed Spring Specialty: Angela Ewald gave the pictures from the spring specialty to Nancy Chargo. These pictures are to be sent to magazines. Nancy will contact Erik Bergishagen to get final details regarding the expenses from the spring specialty and to clarify that expenses HRLRC should have paid. We need to subtract $40 from the cost of the obedience judge's dinner. According to Erik Bergishagen, a portion of Tom Bradley's airfare ($100) will be refunded. Tom Bradley did not charge us a judging fee. If we can get donations, we might consider purchasing slip leads as prizes for the spring specialty next year.

Fall Specialty: The AKC papers were received and the judges are approved. The hotel will be the Holiday Inn. Nancy is looking for awards/trophy donations from people. Please contact her if you are interested in sponsoring a particular class or award. Pauline will give Best of Opposite Sex in Sweepstakes (a Waterford crystal piece) as well as provide a check for the BOB ribbon award. It was stated that members usually donate about $40 to pay for a trophy. People can choose to sponsor a particular class if so desired. Names of sponsors will be listed in the catalog. For 1st place, there will be bread and butter plates that have the club logo on them (30 are still needed at $12.50 each). For 2nd, 3rd and 4th places, pewter magnets with the club logo are awarded (45 are still needed at $3 each). Nancy wasn't sure if she wanted to use slip leads made by Saudjie Crook as prizes. She suggested they should be used as prizes at the spring specialty. It was mentioned that there are usually prizes left over (especially from obedience). It is a possibility that prizes can be ordered AFTER the entries and their ribbons could be sent in the mail to them. Nancy stated she is ordering fewer ribbons this year than in the past.

OLD BUSINESS

Michigan Hunting Dog Federation: Mike called the secretary and vice president. They appear to be a lobbying group for all types of retrievers with a major goal being to support casting dogs on state land. Mike is still waiting to get some information back from them. The organization goes to Lansing to fight for our rights.

We still need a spring specialty show chair. Nancy has all the paperwork and files so it will be relatively easy for someone else to take over. It will be held at Cobo Hall again in 2003. Sheila Wallington from Balnova has been asked to judge. Discussion was held regarding whether we should continue to host the spring specialty. Only 17 HRLRC members showed their dogs. It was stated past exhibitors complain that there are not that many entries and therefore head down to Louisville instead. Sites other than Cobo Hall have been looked at as an alternative but don't seem to be feasible due to size limitations. In the future, Ford Field may be a possibility. It was suggested that instead of a supported specialty show, to host a match instead. However, it is likely that many people may not attend. A point that was brought up is: "Do we want the show for the sport and fun of it or are we so concerned with making a profit?" The money from catalog sales is divided on a prorated basis between the breed clubs hosting specialties based on numbers of dogs entered in each breed. However, it seems that only HRLRC members and not people from any of the other breed clubs have sold these for the past several years. Bev put it to the membership for a vote for those in favor of having a spring 2003 specialty. There was no opposition. Judy Trevino is considering being the show chair for 2003.

Field Work: Mike Pipia stated he is available Sundays. Because most of the interested people are just starting out, basic skills are what is most desired. The dates May 19th and 26th are a possibility. Mike's evening phone: (586) 731-7961. Please contact him if you are interested in attending. The sessions will start at 9a.m. Sunday, May 19. It might be a possibility to use Sharon and Don Fowler's property. It was suggested this information be placed on the Yahoo mailing group. It was mentioned that the Michigan Hunting Dog Association also offers classes. Tuesdays are starter's classes and Wednesdays are for seasoned handlers/dogs. These sessions are held at 6 p.m. at Sharon Fowler's. There are other sessions available for more advanced work. The fee to participate is $20, which goes to the club. This is UKC. Wingers, real birds and ammo are used. Usually there are over 20 participants in each class.

NEW BUSINESS

Guests were introduced.

Bev motioned to close meeting at 8:55 p.m. Meeting adjourned.

Respectfully Submitted,
Jeanine Asch, Secretary

CHOOSE THE BEST DRY FOOD

Learn to recognize the hallmarks of good, bad, and mediocre foods.

How should you select your dog's food? When you walk into your local pet food store, and walk the miles of aisles of stacks of bags, what is it that makes you grab that sack, and not any of the others? Is it:

- Price?
- Label claims or package appearance?
- The recommendation of a friend?
- Your veterinarian's prescription?

BZZZZZT! Bad answers! Here's why:

PRICE: The most expensive foods are not always the best ones in a store (they are not even necessarily good!). many chain pet stores charge a small fortune for foods that (by our criteria, described further along) are no good at all. Generally (but not always) we find the best foods in small, independent stores and where, interestingly, the prices for the great foods are not much higher than the chain stores charge for their (low-quality) "best."

On the other hand, you can be certain that the least expensive foods are generally not good. This is not snobbism, by the way. It costs the manufacturer more to buy top-quality ingredients, and it's only reasonable to expect that he will have to pass along those costs. And if a food costs pennies per pound, you can be assured that its contents cost the maker next to nothing--in other words, the food is vitamin-fortified sawdust, more or less. (And to take care of the inevitable question, "CAN'T A DOG LIVE ON VITAMIN-FORTIFIED SAWDUST?" We'll say right now that the answer is "yes, but if you take that approach, you can expect to pay every penny you've saved in veterinary bills later.")

LABEL CLAIMS, PACKAGE APPEARANCE: Each and every day, the food makers are getting more sophisticated in their approach to packaging. They know that dog owners are becoming increasingly health-conscious and interested in dog food ingredients, so they are rushing to show us how healthy their foods are--and we do mean "show." We haven't seen so many beautiful depictions of vegetables and grains since Andy Warhol's time. And the label descriptions! Carefully rhapsodic! Unfortunately, there's rarely a correlation between what's shown on the bag and what's in the bag. Perhaps the most notorious example of this is Purina's new food, BENEFUL. (What a name, eh? Beneficial, bountiful, it's all there. You have to hand it to them.) The front of Beneful's bag shows fresh ears of corn, snappy unshelled peas, and gorgeous green-topped carrots. In fact, what is actually contains is ground corn, used here as a dried grain and a lower-cost source of protein, and dried peas and dried carrots. The latter, by the way, appear 17th and 18th on the list of ingredients, far below sugar (10th), sorbitol (another sweetener, 11th on the list), and even sorbic acid, a preservative that appears 15th on the list of ingredients. PURINA MUST BE COUNTING ON PEOPLE TO TAKE ONE LOOK AT THE COLOR PHOTOGRAPHS OF THE VEGETABLES, READ THE WORD "VEGETABLES" ON THE FRONT, AND ASSUME THAT "GEE, PURINA REALLY HAS COME AROUND, PUTTING FRESH VEGGIES IN ITS FOOD!"

As far as we're concerned, this food is a perfect example of everything that's wrong with the conglomerate dog food industry; it's all sizzle and very little steak (beef is 7th on the list of ingredients). The product has been manipulated in every way possible to appeal to humans, complete with a variety of cute shapes, artificial colors, and chemically enhanced textures, a pretty bag, and lots of healthy-sounding adjectives (wholesome, moist, meaty, real, vitamin-rich). But the contents don't come close to fulfilling all this promise.

THE RECOMMENDATION OF A FRIEND: Your friend may, in fact, feed her dog the best possible food--for that dog. In no way does the guarantee that her dog's food will agree with your dog. Feeding dogs is an individual matter. Everything including the dog's size, age, breed, health, activity level, allergies, intolerances, condition of teeth, past nutritional status, and even his preferences will affect whether he thrives or merely survives on a given food. We don't want to discourage you, but we know people who have to buy their three dogs three different foods. All three dogs look like a million bucks, so that's that.

YOUR VETERINARIAN'S PRESCRIPTION: Would this be a good time to mention that veterinarians who register for an online account with Hill's, makers of Science Diet, can expect, as its Web site tantalizes, "convenient, easy ordering with real-time pricing and product availability plus a chance to win a Porsche?"

Sorry, but not many veterinarians know much more about nutrition than your next-door neighbor. But when they've been given free Hill's dog food in vet school, their veterinary nutrition textbooks have been underwritten by Hill's, and written by Hill's researchers, is it any wonder they have really good feelings about Hill's products?

GOOD ANSWER! All right, you're overdue for some positive reinforcement. Here's the best possible answer to the question, "How should you select your dog's food?" I CHOOSE THE FOOD THAT APPEARS TO HAVE THE LARGEST AMOUNT OF WHOLE, TOP-QUALITY INGREDIENTS, AND THE SMALLEST AMOUNT OF LOW-QUALITY OR UNDESIRABLE INGREDIENTS, AND THAT MY DOG THRIVES ON."

In our opinion, the list of ingredients, printed by law on every bag of dog food, is the best source of information about a food. You don't need a veterinarian, or us, for that matter, to tell you what is a good food and what is an exceedingly mediocre food; you just need to teach yourself to recognize the hallmarks of each kind of food. We've boxed this information for you (to be followed by this article: "The Good, Bad, and the Mediocre: What the List of Ingredients Indicates.")

Don't take our word for it! Compare the ingredients, and decide for yourself; it's really not that difficult. Look for a food that contains lots of the "hallmarks of a high quality food," few of the "high-quality foods should contain a minimum of . . ." traits, and none of the "hallmarks of a low-quality food."

Then have your dog try it. Give him a month or two on the food. If he breaks out in itching fits, begins licking his paws incessantly, develops an ear infection, or has dramatic digestive reactions, give the good away and try another one! If, on the other hand, he's always had one or more of the aforementioned symptoms, and they clear up, you're on the right track. A good dog food will contribute to a healthy coat, good energy level, balanced temperament, and flawless health.

One final word about what's "best" for your dog: It might change. As dogs age, their nutritional requirements change. They can develop food allergies or intolerances at any point in their lives. Don't get so attached to a food that you fail to see whether it's failing your dog. It may be a good food, but if it's not working for your dog, there is no point in buying it.

OUR SELECTION CRITERIA: We've told you how we suggest selecting a food. On the following pages, we will share with you a few foods that we think are above average. But we should probably also explain what we did NOT do when we picked these foods:

- We did NOT conduct lab tests to make sure the "Guaranteed Analysis" printed on the label accurately reflects the contents; that's the job of state feed control officials, and way beyond the scope of our resources.
- We DID NOT inspect manufacturing plants or investigate the manufacturers' Boards of Directors. We hear rumors all the time about company owners who are rude or even big, fat liars. We hear about moldy food and mislabeled bags. If you experience one of these things, we suggest that you call the company and let them know they have a problem -- and that you select another food.

- We DID NOT select foods on the basis of protein or fat content; more is not always better. Some dogs need more; some dogs need less.
- We DID NOT examine every food on the market. That would be impossible! You may find a food that looks as good or better than ours. Good for you! Send us some information about it; we'd love to share.
- We DID NOT rand-order the foods. They are presented in alphabetical order, because, remember, what's "best" for your dog isn't necessarily best for ours.

All the following foods are good; we like them all. (see insert) And, for the record, we still like all the foods we've selected in the past. If we've named a food before that does not appear here, it's due to space limitations, not because it's fallen out of our favor.

THE GOOD, BAD, AND MEIOCRE: WHAT THE LIST OF INGREDIENTS INDICATES

The hallmarks of a high quality food include the following:

- ✓ SUPERIOR SOURCES OF PROTEIN. This means either whole, fresh meats or single-source meat meal (for example, chicken meal rather than poultry meal).
- ✓ A WHOLE-MEAT SOURCE AS ONE OF THE FIRST TWO INGREDIENTS (chicken or chicken meal, for instance). Better yet would be two meat sources among the top three ingredients (say, chicken and chicken meal). Whole, fresh meat is a wonderful, healthy food for dogs, but it also contains a lot of water, and the extra weight of that moisture usually boosts the fresh meat to the top of the list of ingredients (which, by law, are listed in order of their weight contribution to the food). If a list of ingredients begins with whole chicken, followed by three or more grains and NO other meat proteins, it's likely that the food contains way more grain than meat. There is no way to know for sure, however, since the makers are not required to specify the amounts or percentages of each ingredient.

By the way, dry foods CAN'T contain more than about 50 percent meat or other animal products; any more than that, and the machinery that mixes and extrudes the kibble gets gummed up.

Meat is the most natural source of protein for canines, and contains the amino acids most important to canine health. A mix of meat proteins (such as fish and beef) helps round out the amino acid profile of the proteins included in the food.

- ✓ WHOLE, UNPROCESSED GRAINS, VEGETABLES, AND OTHER FOODS. A previously unprocessed food has the best chance of surviving the food-making process with some of its nutrients intact.

HIGH-QUALITY DRY FOODS SHOULD CONTAIN A MINIMUM OF THE FOLLOWING:

- ❖ FOOD FRAGMENTS. Fragments are lower-cost by-products of another food manufacturing process, such as brewer's rice (a waste product of the alcohol industry) and wheat bran (the fibrous hull removed from the nutritious wheat kernel). Most foods contain at least one fragment, as makers attempt to keep the food affordable. Beware of a product that contains several fragments of a single food. Some food makers do this to disguise an excess of a low-value ingredient. Remember, the law dictates that each ingredient is listed separately by weight. So when you see a list of ingredients that begins "lamb, rice flour, rice bran, brewer's rice . . ." you should be aware that there is far more rice in the product than lamb.

- ❖ MEAT BY-PRODUCTS. We've moderated our stance on meat by-products; we used to discard any food that contained them. We've been convinced, however, that fresh by-products may offer more nutrient value than a rendered meat meal. But using an animal by-product (or more than one animal by-product) for a food's main protein source is indicative of a low quality product. We'd prefer to see these products play a supporting role to whole meats or meat meals, say, somewhere below the top five ingredients. However, please note our ban on "generic" ingredients (below); absolutely no "animal by-products" allowed.

HALLMARKS OF A LOW-QUALITY DRY FOOD:

"GENERIC" FATS OR PROTEINS. "Animal fat," for example, can be just about anything: recycled grease from restaurants, or an unwholesome mystery mix of various fats. In this case, a preferable ingredient would be "beef fat" or "chicken fat." "Animal protein" and "poultry protein" are far inferior to "beef protein" or "chicken protein."

ARTIFICIAL PRESERVATIVES (including BHA, BHT, or Ethoxyquin).

ARTIFICIAL COLORS. Your dog doesn't care what color his food is. He doesn't need daily --- lifetime --- exposure to these unnecessary chemicals.

PROPYLENE GLYCOL. Ditto for this chemical, which is added to some "chewy" foods to keep them moist.

SWEETENERS. Dogs, like humans, have a taste for sweets. Corn syrup, sucrose, ammoniated glycyrrhizin, and other sweeteners are sometimes added to lower-quality foods to increase their appeal. But dietary sugar can aggravate health problems in dogs, including diabetes.
